LATEST NEWS.

TOBACCO FOR PAUPERS.

The Press Association states that the Local Government Board is about to issue a new order for the benefit of paupers in the workhouses under the control of the Guardians of the Poor. The order states that in future in any Union house the Guardians may, without reference to the medical officer or the Local Government Board, order the issue of tobacco to male paupers.

THE EVE OF THE COTTON STRUGGLE.

The Press Association's Manchester correspondent states that unless something quite unforeseen takes place there will in the course of a few days begin to-day at the usual hour of having work at nine o'clock. The representatives on both sides keep up a determined front, and in spite of appeals to the contrary there are no signs of giving way in any quarter.

THE SOCIETY SLANDER CASE.

The hearing of the action for slander brought by Mrs. Lender against Mrs. Smyth was resumed on Thursday by Mr. Justice Cozens-Hardy, before Mr. Justice Day. Mrs. Lender was twice recalled by Sir Edward Clarke, and other evidence Sir Edward Clarke adduced was to the effect that Mr. Lockwood afterwards replied, and the court adjourned. Yesterday afternoon the concluding speeches of £500 damages being recorded for plaintiff.

THE ALTHORPE HORROR.

The Press Association's Northampton correspondent telegraphs that night: That interest in the Althorpe horror has again been aroused by the return to her friends of Mrs. Jackson, better known locally as Mrs. Tye, who was at one time believed to be the victim. The girl's mother, it is stated, was the first to express the belief, and it is the police station she thought she recognised a green dress, worn by the murdered woman, as belonging to her daughter. Inquiries were at once appeared, and of whom nothing had been heard until her return.

THE ST. JOHN'S FIRE.

The Lord Mayor and the Lord Mayor-Elect have issued a joint circular asking for further funds for the relief of the sufferers by the fire at St. John's, Newfoundland, in July. The poorest inhabitants are still camped out in wooden huts. The funds of the local committee are almost exhausted and an exceptionally cold season has set in. The London committee have subscribed about £3,000 which it is desired to increase to £30,000 before the fund is closed. Contributions to the fund may be sent to the Mansion House and clothing to Messrs. J. and J. Bayley, 1, Cornhill-lane, Dowgate Hill, London.

YESTERDAY'S CABINET.

The third Cabinet Council this week, and the fourth since the pleasant series has commenced, was held yesterday afternoon at 10, Downing street, Mr. Gladstone presiding. The Cabinet sat four and a half hours, the most of the time being taken for their respective offices. Mr. Bryce was the only member who had a long interview with the Cabinet-held a long meeting yesterday at noon at the office of the Local Government Board. The Press Association understands that the subject discussed was the possibility of further measures for the extension and equalisation of the franchise. The members present were Mr. W. E. Forster, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Ripon, Lord Kimberley, Mr. Asquith, and Lord Tweedmouth. It is stated unlike not for an hour and a half, the result being one of the subjects subsequently discussed in the full Cabinet.

THE LONDON POISONING MYSTERIES.

RESPITE OF THE CONDEMNED MAN.

The Press Association states that an official communication from the Home Office has been received by Messrs. Waters and Bryan, the solicitors to the prisoner Neill, now under sentence of death in Newgate, to the effect that in consequence of the petition from that firm, coupled with affidavits prepared and lodged by them, the Queen has been graciously pleased to grant a respite of 14 days from Tuesday next. The Hon. Secretary states that upon the result of the investigation of the Home Office the American and Canadian evidence be unfavourable, it will be the course of the Home Office and that the respite, it is understood, is granted for the purpose of allowing the evidence to be received and considered, a decision which has already been communicated to the condemned man. It may be added that Neill's solicitors are spared no efforts to prove that Neill was not in a condition to be responsible for his actions.

ANOTHER TROUBLED SOCIETY.

A meeting of the Leeds Allotment Company was held yesterday to consider the course to be taken to meet the crisis owing to the action of the Official receiver in presenting a petition to wind up the company. Mr. Beck presided, and Mr. Spencer Ballard and two other directors were present. The chairman stated that the object of the meeting to appoint a committee to confer with them in preparing a valuable proposal, which it was hoped would be received and considered, a decision which has already been communicated to the condemned man. It may be added that Neill's solicitors are sparing no efforts to prove that Neill was not in a condition to be responsible for his actions.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT AT HUNSLET.

TWO MEN BURIED ALIVE.

Yesterday morning, between ten and eleven, two men were killed and others injured by a fall of slag at the Hunslet Steel Works. Close to the works is a great heap of this waste material, which was brought by the Midland Railway for ballast purposes, and was in process of removal by a gang of men employed by Mr. W. Smith, of Walkerne, near Wakefield. Yesterday morning the men had undermined a portion of the heap, and the top of the superincumbent mass to bring it down with wedges. They had been at work on the top a short time when the SLAG GAVE WAY, and fell, carrying the workmen with it. They were—Fred Longman, married, of Armley; Thos. Cooper, single, young man; Edward Cross, Jubilee Lodging-house, Hunslet-lane; James Hewins, Dyer-street lodging-house; George Winter, and Frederick Ward. Perhaps the crisis between them giving way, Winter and Clarke leaped back while the others had to make their way out of harm's way. Longman, Cooper, Cross, and Horton were completely buried by the falling rubbish. When the rubbish fell two of the four labourers who were thrown down with it could be seen. These were Cross and Horton. It was found that Longman and Cooper were embedded under the fallen slag. Suspicion was aroused by the fact that the labourers within call were set to work with picks and shovels, and men were dispatched to the spot, of the men was reached in about half an hour. He was

and was killed and badly mutilated by the refuse, the other man was found, lying under a stone, dazed, but free from injury. Horton was found, lying under a stone, dazed, but free from injury. He was dead, and deadfully crushed. Meantime the Chief-constable, Mr. Webb, superintendent Hanson, the local police arrived, and were of service in keeping away the crowd which gathered and in facilitating the rescue of the bodies. The Hunslet Ambulance and several members of the medical staff of the Leeds Infirmary were also dispatched to the spot to adelephone message. The injuries of Cross and Horton were of a character which could not be sent to the Infirmary. Cross was suffering from concussion of the brain, and Horton, who had lost consciousness was able to go home after having dressed. One of the men was injured on the right over a railway truck, which afforded him protection. How either he or the other man who survives escaped with so little injury is a mystery. The bodies of Longman and Cooper were removed to the Wellington Hotel, Hunslet-lane, and on Monday. Fortunately the other men who had been buried alive escaped with only a fright, or a sprit, or some of them would probably have been crushed to death. Ward is married, and has seven growing grandsons favourably.

LAW AND ORDER.

Isaac Ingham, of the Castle Inn, Leeds, was charged at the Leeds Town Hall, yesterday, with being drunk and disorderly, and on the same dismissed.

Twenty prostitutes, John Walker (21) and James Wilson, were charged at the Leeds Town Hall yesterday with stealing a fare-box, the property of the Leeds Corporation. The prisoner was sent to prison for two months, and Walker for one month.

The following persons were summoned at the Leeds Town Hall for offences under the defective sewpipe and measures:—John Kirking man, greengrocer, 2, Stray-street, Woodhouse; Joseph Ward, Hunslet-lane; Thomas Ward, 1, Back Garden-street, Woodhouse-street. Each had to pay the costs.

The Leeds police are in search of Chas. Spink, a young clerk, lately in the employ of Mr. Wm. Wardell, butter and egg merchant, Grey Crowther-street, who has been missing since Hallowe'en, and it is supposed he has made off with over £100 has been issued. The police incline to the belief that he has fled to Ireland.

Ernest Wood and John Wilks, hurriers employed at Messrs. Brooks and Pickup's Gallery, Briggate, were charged at the Leeds Town Hall Riding Court, on Tuesday, for contravening a bye-law made under the Leeds Corporation Act, by disclosing the orders of the "hanger-on." The defendants were in the employ of Mr. Edward Bayne, an expert pickpocket, had his career suddenly cut short outside the Leeds Theatre Royal on Saturday night. Detective Yeadon, who watched him dexterously rummaging a woman's pocket, at the moment dropped a knife. That was sufficient. His occupation was changed for Leeds Gaol for 14 days. Bail to pickup cokum at Armley Gaol for a month.

LEEDS COUNTY COURT.—On Wednesday, before Judge Tayler, Warning Tyler, Warning House, Hyde Park, was sued by Messrs. J. Gall and Son, solicitors, Leeds, for £25 10s. 10d. for payment of £11 12s. 11d., cost of a case seeking to prove that the plaintiff was guilty of fraudulent conduct, but this was denied.—Judge Greenhow gave a verdict for plaintiff for £2 2s., with costs on the scale for £5 and £10 respectively, and ordered the defendants—His Honour decided for defendants—In a third action, Mr. Thomas Wilson and Ann Robinson, his wife, of 11, Brunswick-street, sued Thomas Wilson, of the Intermediate Laundry, New Briggate, to recover £50 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained through the upset of the defendant in not hiring a grate, through which the female defendant had to be rescued by the fire brigade. Judge Greenhow gave a verdict for plaintiff for £25 and costs.

RAILWAY DISASTER AT THIRSK.

MAIL TRAIN WRECKED.

IT CATCHES FIRE!

TEN PEOPLE KILLED: SEVERAL INJURED.

AN APPALLING CATASTROPHE.

To the other horrors chronicled this week has now to be added a fearful railway disaster, for in the early hours of Thursday morning the Mail Train Conveying Passengers from Scotland to London came into collision with a goods train near Thirsk Station, nine persons being instantly killed and a large number injured, some very seriously. The Scotch expresses at this season are usually crowded, many families returning to London early in November after spending the autumn in the Highlands. On Tuesday night there were so many passengers it became necessary to divide the express into two parts at Edinburgh. The first portion consisted of thirteen coaches, including a Pullman sleeping car and the usual brake vans, and the second portion was similarly made up. The second portion of the train was composed of fish, wagons, which were to be sent on to Germany. The passengers in the former train were chiefly from Glasgow and Edinburgh, and those in the second portion came chiefly from Aberdeen and other northern towns. It was at about twenty minutes to two yesterday morning that the first portion train left for King's-cross, which it reached safely at eight o'clock on Wednesday evening. The first portion left Edinburgh a quarter of an hour later, the usual interval in such cases, and all went well for a while. From Berwick to Northallerton speed had nevertheless to be slackened

OWING TO THE FOG, but shortly after leaving the latter town the atmosphere cleared considerably, and the driver of the second portion of the train, which left at 2.20 train was therefore going at a tremendous speed, when it reached the Manor-House siding, two and a half miles from Thirsk, and four and a half from Northallerton. It was at about 3 o'clock, and many of the passengers were sleeping. At the siding shunting operations were going on. Some strange lack of judgment or neglect a heavy goods train, laden with coal for Hendon, London, was actually on the main line at the moment when the second portion of the Mail Train came up. Of course, should have been blocked both at the home and distance signals, but it seems to be pretty clearly established that the signals were not in use. At any rate,

THE FIRST INTIMATION THAT THE DRIVER HAD

of the terrible danger in front of him was the sight of the tail lights of the goods train, which at that moment was crossing the main line. It was then too late to avert or even to minimise to any appreciable extent the collision between the two trains, and the express dashed into the rear of the goods wagons with appalling force and disastrous results. The engine of the express and the first brake of the goods train some distance along the line, and the express during its progress over the centre of the express off the track, with the result that the goods train, the engine, the express engine and the massive Pullman car were driven back and telescoped one another. The tender of the engine was thrown into an adjoining field. When the momentum of the rest of the train took place a second collision took place between the tender of the engine and the first brake van, from which in a moment came beatstanding cries of distress, which were heard for a long distance, and the injured, and the injured. To add to the terrible scene and the gloom of a very chill November morning was illuminated by the flames, which, while it lasted, there revealed sickening details of the calamity, surrounded, some of the features, and the scattered fragments of the train, and the part of the train, in which was a Pullman's sleeping car, was completely demolished. The other cars were intact, and those of all the passengers who had escaped injury at the first shock, and had immediately applied themselves to the work of rescuing their less fortunate fellow-travellers from the terrible exposure. The Pullman car was lighted throughout with gas caused it to fall a ready prey to the flames, and it spread with fearful rapidity, and soon engulfed the wreckage. The

THE TRAIN TOOK FIRE,

SPEEDILY BECAME A BONFIRE HOLOCAUST,

and the fire continued to burn with unabated fury for a considerable time. The flames, however, in a comparatively short time the fire had burnt through the roof and had commenced to burn down to consumes; and the five carriages had been reduced to a mass of ashes. Medical assistance were immediately dispatched for medical and other aid, and Doctors Hardey, Ferguson, Dryden, Gordon, and Hanson, from Thirsk, and Doctors Lumley and Hutchinson, from North-allerton, and Drs. Wilson, Anderson, and Gooking, from York, arrived as speedily as possible. Many of the injured passengers, and a passenger who managed to escape serious injury was amazed, and there was the greatest confusion. The train were eagerly bent on finding them if possible. With the greatest promptitude that was possible under the circumstances

PASSENGERS WERE EXTRICATED

from the shattered mass, but all could not be got out without great difficulty. The guard of the express train, named Ewart, who sustained a severe wound in the head, and was attended to by Mr. Buchanan, from Cambridge, who was also a passenger in the express, and the injured were conveyed on an ambulance to the Cottage Hospital at Thirsk. The last-named gave a description of the scene in the same compartment as far as Darlington left him there and joined some others in another part of the train, and in one of those who were killed. The main line was completely blocked and seven for a considerable distance with the shattered and burnt remains of the carriages and goods wagons. Mr. Ewart, the North-Eastern Railway Company from York were in London during the night, and received the news astonish the theme, but they had obtained a firm hold before their arrival. A large staff of the Company's employes were dispatched to the spot, and were busily engaged in the work of removing and

CLEARING THE DEBRIS.

Mr. Welburn, passenger superintendent at York, Mr. Dyson, Mr. Brown, Mr. Harper, superintendent of operations. Undoubtedly the disaster would have been much more serious if the Pullman car had been one, the length and strength of the construction of which the Pullman car had been built more than was possible for the ordinary carriages. Those in it were comfortable, but the exception of a lady who was very, struck on the forehead and cut her face, and Mr. Marquis, of Tweddale, Hornby, and Mr. Kinlock were amongst those who were slightly injured in connection with the disaster. There were some rather

SERIOUS INJURIES,

Shortly before it occurred one of the officials had left one part of the train in which two men were killed, and he had to go another part of the train and then saved his life. Another centleman who was in the train left the compartment to meet his wife and child. The former was crushed beneath the falling wreckage. He vainly endeavoured to extricate the child, and the latter was killed by death; within on looking around for his child. A lady was found with her child in her arms, the one lying at some distance, having suffered the loss of her husband, who was in the train and was wrecked. The second Pullman car in the express met a fate not unlike that of the Pullman car, the colony of railway accidents. The body of the car left the tracks, and being shot forward and upward by the force of which it was subjected, it struck a huge clean over the pile of debris formed by engine, tender, and the goods wagons, and landed on the top of the trucks of the goods train. Still more remarkable, the Pullman car was not much damaged, and the Pullman car escaped without injury. Some of those who had left and had to be awakened; while others were only aroused by the shock of the collision with the trucks. Among the occupants were the Marquis of Tweddale (who is a director of the Great North of the North British Line), and General Lambton, who sustained a severe wound in the head, and at the cottage of a labourer, named Johnson, who resided near the scene of the death. The Marquis of Tweddale, is in said, walked to the cottage in his stockings. He had put his boots off before turning down to sleep, and in the confusion that ensued was not able to find them. The experiences of the Marquis of Tweddale, Mr. Marquis and was extraordinary. They were not aware of any danger, and no attempt had therefore been made to pull up the train; and such was the force of the collision, that they were both shot from their engine into the air and propelled forward for a great twenty yards, into an adjoining field. The experiences of Mr. Marquis and Mr. Kinlock were of an entirely different character from those of the Marquis of Tweddale, who was alone in the Pullman car, and was in a state of great confusion. The doctors describe the phenomenon of those of the passengers who escaped as perfectly calm and reasonable. There gradually came to light some items of personal history, which added pathos to the disaster. Some of the passengers were just setting out on long journeys, of which the ride from Edinburgh to London was but the first brief stage. For instance, little Lettie Hamilton was bound for Australia, in charge of an aunt and uncle.

SLEPT THROUGH THE COLLISION,

TO JOIN THE PARENTS.

She and her aunt are both dead, and her uncle's name figures among the list of the injured. Among the Dundee passengers were two young ladies who were bound for Brazil; and one gentleman, an official of the Hong-Kong Bank, was to have left this country for China on Friday. Captain Duncan M'Leon, of the Black Watch, who was in an adjoining compartment. The oldest of the victims of the year the Scotch express has generally a full complement of passengers, and when it started from Edinburgh there was a good average number. One of the young ladies who left Dundee for Edinburgh, underwent a very painful experience. She was on her way to London, where she had obtained a situation, and he was travelling with his young wife, with their belongings, all prepared to settle in the metropolis. He was overjoyed shaken, and had to be attended to by Dr. Hedley on a subsequent day. The effect of the terrible shock were greatly augmented by anxiety as to the fate of the wife of the express, and the child, Hartley carried to him the sorrowful information that the latter was crushed to death in the smoking ruins of the engine. It was her body which was, perhaps, the most shockingly mutilated of the remains that were discovered. The express driver proved himself

A REAL FELLOW.

Mr. Dryanston, of Leeds, records an incident concerning him which ought to be known. "I could see, had been very badly injured and was covered with blood. I had no idea of the extent of the injuries, I went to assist to carry him to the side of the line, and I was surprised at the help some of the poor passengers." It was a brave service, and it was forwarded to the Royal Humane Society for a medal. The fireman had an escape which appears equally miraculous, for the engine was turned over on the line.

THE LINE WAS CLEARED

during the day, and the 10 o'clock, a powerful steam crane the wreck was hit by his turn asunder, and by half-past one o'clock the line was open for traffic. The dead were taken to Northallerton and Thirsk and Northallerton, which had since the early morning been the rendezvous of the relatives of the injured, was then permissible on the main line. At 5-40 the 10 o'clock left Thirsk and the break-down gang ceased their arduous labours.

LIST OF KILLED.

The following is the list of the killed, so far as ascertained from the information in the possession of documents and letters found upon the bodies of the victims:—

Mr. R. M. Boyle, of Messrs. Aspinar and Co., music publishers, 65, Newgate-street, London.

Mr. J. Forsyth, of Messrs. Forsyth Brothers, Leytonstone, near London; had in his possession a return ticket to Leeds.

Mr. J. H. Lee, potato merchant, Smithfields, Manchester; had in his possession a return number of The Bible with insurance.

Mr. J. Anderson, of Dundee, Dundee; had in his possession insurance documents to £2,750, viz.—Tit-Bits for £100; Answers for £1,000, and Cassell's Family Paper, £1,000; Household, £50; Ralph Soper £250, and Everyone's Life £250, and a return ticket to London.

Mr. J. Boswell Hill, 119, George-street, Edinburgh; had in his possession a return ticket for £250.

Caption Duncan A. M'Leod, 42nd Highlanders (Black Watch), en route by Orient-steamer for Gibraltar and India.

George Petch, goods guard, Middlesbrough.

Lottie Hamilton (a child of five), of Alexandria, Dumbartonshire.

THE MISSING.

Miss Annie M'Culloch, 2, Gilmore-street, Alexandria, and Mrs. Macleod, of 9, Lawn-street, Maryhill, both of whom were missing, supposed to be among the dead.

THE INJURED.

The following list of injured passengers is also officially issued:—

Mr. A. Mackenzie, tailor, 9, Lovat-street, Dundee; slightly injured, and staying at Osterington.

Miss Jessie Brown, Brackley.

Mr. S. Robinson, Montrose.

Master Robinson, Montrose.

Mrs. Dodd, Gleset Harbour, near Aberdeen.

Mr. Dodd, commercial traveller, Pilrig, near Edinburgh.

Mr. David M'Culloch, painter, Alexandria, Dumbartonshire; slightly injured.

Lady Stuart, Hampden Gardens, London; slight injuries.

Mr. R. A. Hodgson, 37, Upper George-street, Bryanston-square, London; slight injuries, and staying at the York Station Hotel.

Mr. George Kloster, 27, Spring Grove-terrace, Hounslow, Middlesex; slight injuries.

Rowland Ewart, driver of the Scotch express, slight injuries, and he and other men were lifted. The fireman of the Scotch express.

With the exception of Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. M'Culloch, Provost Sutherland, and Mr. R. A. Hodgson, all the injured passengers, after having received medical attention, were able to continue their journeys. Their injuries were not of a serious character, consisting of bruises, cuts, and in addition to the above official list of the injured, we have ascertained that Mr. Kinlock was not left for a passenger in the Pullman car of the Scotch express, and he was accompanied by his wife, and had one of his thumbs injured. He was, how-ever, able to proceed on his journey, and reached Peterborough in the afternoon. Mr. Reginald Ewart, son of Mr. T. C. Tatham, 4, Chatsworth-square, Hyde Park, London, was slightly cut on the face. After having it dressed he was able to resume his journey to Aberdeen. Indeed, it must be felt the relatives of the killed and for the injured.—Mr. Sutherland, provost of Thirsk, said that there was some question as to the line Miss Williams M'Culloch, the daughter of the injured, was summoned from a neighbouring hotel, and entered the room in which the dead lay, and within his pale face was covered with bandages, and stars. He stated that he and the child and the wife had been thrown out of the carriage, and were travelling together at the time of the accident, and he was unable to remember anything after the explosion. Amongst those in the room were Mr. Ewart, superintendent of the Aberdeen Fire Brigade Association; and Mr. E. Harford, secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, who had come to offer assistance to the survivor of the directors of the company for the relatives of the killed and for the injured.—Mr. Sutherland, provost of Thirsk, said that there was some question as to the line Miss Williams M'Culloch, the daughter of the injured, was summoned from a neighbouring hotel, and entered the room in which the dead lay within his pale face was covered with bandages, and stars. He stated that he and the child and the wife had been thrown out of the carriage, and were travelling together at the time of the accident, and he was unable to remember anything after the explosion.—One of the injured passengers, Mr. Marquis, was not missing.—The inspector of police at Thirsk, who had received information of more than one body in addition to the eight just identified.—Burial orders were then made out. The bodies were conveyed to the cottage of the jury, with the relatives of the deceased, and the coroner's jury proceeded to view the bodies. Notwithstanding the statement of the police that apart from the eight identified there was no other death of one other woman—supposed to be Miss Williams—and that the remains of Mr. Mackenzie are amongst the debris, as she was a traveller by the train, and is now missing.

THE N.E.R. DIRECTORS.

A meeting of the North-Eastern Railway directors was held at Darlington on Thursday at which the Duke of Cleveland presided. The meeting was private, but the Press Association's representative learns that the directors have made to the disaster at Thirsk, but that no definite resolution was come to, the matter awaiting the result of the Board of Trade inquiry.

QUEEN AND THE PRINCE OF WALES INQUIRE.

Mr. Mundella, President of the Board of Trade, has received a telegram from Windsor from Sir Henry Ponsonby on behalf of the Queen:—"Can you inform us what is the cause of the disaster? Way accident the Queen's sincere sympathy." Sir Henry Ponsonby on behalf of the Prince of Wales:—"Can you inform us what is the cause of the disaster? Way accident the Queen's sincere sympathy." Sir Henry Ponsonby on behalf of the Prince of Wales, who is at present the guest of Lord Londonderry at Wynyard Park, Durham, and is anxious to be kept informed.

BOARD OF TRADE INQUIRY: SIGNALMAN'S STATEMENT.

Yesterday, shortly before twelve o'clock, Major Marindin, the Board of Trade inspector, commenced his investigation of the disaster. Mr. J. Fraser, solicitor, Mr. Jay, Mr. Bateman, solicitor to the company, Mr. Welburn, passenger superintendent, Mr. Dyson, Mr. Brown, goods department, and other officials were present. Mr. Wright, of the Railway Servants, was also present on behalf of the signalman. The first witness examined was the SIGNALMAN HOLMES.

Having been told that he might make a statement or decline to do so, he recounted the whole of his evidence, which we extract:—I was on duty at the accident. He stated that he went on duty on Thursday at 6 o'clock in the morning, and was relieved at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He had gone to his cabin, and he did not signal the train, saying he had to go to the signal box to see the engineman, and on his way he had seen a lady. I heard him say that he had lost a child that night previously. He had asked the station master to allow him off duty, and the station master refused to allow him off. He was so tired that he felt asleep, and he did not signal at the right time, with the result that the goods train came on top of the express. Mr. Forsyth has passed some

STRIKE STATISTICS ON THE OFFICIALS.

Says he: They were conveyed to Thirsk about six o'clock, and I must say that our treatment by the officials was not what is ought to have been. I complained in strong terms myself, and I also heard Lord Tweeddale speaking very severely to them. At Thirsk we had to wait for a considerable time, perhaps unavoidably, while the bodies were being carried from the train to the waiting-room, but there was no necessity for our being detained there for an hour and a half in order to take us to Northallerton, and having to change trains. The train was not provided by another train to York, where we had a wait of three-quarters of an hour, and then once more we had to change trains. It was that the railway officials could have done would have saved us from a great deal of trouble. Great in London, instead of changing as about as they did. We had no refreshment offered to us, and as a matter of fact from the time the collision occurred until I reached home I had scarcely tasted food. R. A. Hodgson, Indian house proprietor, of 37, Upper George-street, Bryanston-square, London, who is lying at the York Station Hotel, says that everything seemed to be all right until there was a sudden crash, and he

SAW THE SIGNS "CAVING IN"

tent fashion. He instantly realised the danger, and he rushed to two ladies who were in the same compartment. "For God's sake put your legs on the seat!" They did so, and the next moment the seats crashed together. The doors of the carriage were forced, and he crawled out through them and lifted out the two ladies. It was a most shocking spectacle, and to add to the horror of the situation the train caught fire. Most of the passengers who were not seriously injured "lost their heads," and he had to use every ounce of his strength to keep them back. He took upon himself the responsibility of ordering the luggage from the van near the engine. Unfortunately he could not rescue the luggage and other goods which were being conveyed by the express. In getting out the passengers he slipped down and fell between the rails, and he was under the train, and the marvel is that there were not more lives lost. He considered that there was a great had a marvellous escape.—Mr. Alexander Macleod, of Dundee, said he was asleep in a bed, and he was strongly advised to purchase Tit-Bits and Answers for his wife. He left Dundee at Darlington they were slow in the carriage, and he was resting upon the seat with his wife and child. He felt asleep, however, and when the collision occurred he was

THROWN VIOLENTLY AGAINST HIS WIFE,

who was sitting on the opposite seat, and the only thing he could remember was something passing over his head. He was unconscious for a time. Mrs. Mackenzie stated that after the train left Darlington they had managed to get asleep, and slumbers were so disturbed by dreams of impending catastrophe that he handed his gold watch and chain over to her, and that was the last he saw. He was awakened by the collision. He at once jumped into his wife, and found himself in a compartment had fallen out, he clambered down, and he was unable to find his wife and child. Upon the child was seized with a convulsive fit. He was ordered to the Pullman car, and he found that the baby was dead. Later on he applied to his superior officer, and the statement was ordered to be examined from duty, saying that he was not fit to go into the witness box. Mr. Forsyth, the master replied that he would see what he could do, and subsequently said that he could not find a particular person. He was sorry that he could not do the best, though he repeated that

HE HAD NOTHING TO HIDE.

He went on duty at eight o'clock, and was after his proper time. He remembers the first portion of the express passing but not the second. At the time he had not felt a bit fatigued. "After that," he continued, in relating his experience, "my memory is confused. Nothing was uppermost in my mind. I recognized the goods train in the ordinary way, but when I saw it I was so tired that I was content to give the necessary signal to send the express on to me. Indeed, I must have fallen asleep, and the goods train remained stationary. The rear signalman came to me at the event to notify to be ready for the express. I was confused on waking up, and forgetting about the goods train, and thinking that the coast was clear at the same time the goods train, seeing the signal, proceeded forward, the engine driver, and the fireman saw the goods train, and dashed into the goods train. The fireman said he had the presence of mind to jump away from the other signal station.

I KNEW WHAT WAS UP, BUT IT WAS TOO LATE.

and all I could do was to wait for the crash." While giving the above narrative Holmes appeared to be overcome. He stated that he had been on the train, and frequently gave way to tears. He went on to add, as a reason accounting for the fact that he was at home last Sunday the circumstance of the collision occurring, that he was off duty, and where a question of signalling arose; came into the room and learned from his wife that he had left the relatives of the killed and for the injured.—Mr. Sutherland, provost of Thirsk, said that there was some question as to the line Miss Williams M'Culloch, the daughter of the injured, was summoned from a neighbouring hotel, and entered the room in which the dead lay within his pale face was covered with bandages, and stars. He stated that he and the child and the wife had been thrown out of the carriage, and were travelling together at the time of the accident, and he was unable to remember anything after the explosion.—One of the injured passengers, Mr. Marquis, was not missing.—The inspector of police at Thirsk, who had received information of more than one body in addition to the eight just identified.—Burial orders were then made out. The bodies were conveyed to the cottage of the jury, with the relatives of the deceased, and the coroner's jury proceeded to view the bodies. Notwithstanding the statement of the police that apart from the eight identified there was no other death of one other woman—supposed to be Miss Williams—and that the remains of Mr. Mackenzie are amongst the debris, as she was a traveller by the train, and is now missing.

MARKET INTELLIGENCE

TRADE REPORTS

LEEDS WOOLLEN.—Yesterday.—Some good orders are being placed for heavier makes of fancies, for younger runs required. Some trade distributed for Scotch and Irish, Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester, for sheffield markets there is not much doing. As regards the sale of piece goods, there is a firm tone, buyers seem the advantage who can pay cash. In the shipping branches there is a good all-round trade passing, and the milling machinery as a rule is fully employed, notwithstanding that stocks are accumulating.
